Game Highlights:

After multiple rain delays, the Giants finally hosted the Nationals in an eagerly anticipated first-round playoff game. The Nationals struck first, scoring two runs in the top of the first inning. However, the Giants responded emphatically in the bottom of the first, capitalizing on several walks to string together nine consecutive runs. Jameson Craig and Brayden Bleck led the charge with doubles, while Ethan Torbit contributed with a crucial single. Trailing by a considerable margin, the Nationals refused to give up. Tyler Hanson took control of the game on the mound, delivering an impressive five innings of efficient pitching. Hanson did a remarkable job in limiting the Giants' scoring opportunities. Supported by Hanson's strong performance, the Nationals' bats gradually chipped away at the deficit, eventually tying the game in the top of the fourth inning. However, the Giants managed to notch a run, maintaining their lead. It was in the top of the fifth inning when the Nationals made a remarkable comeback, pushing eight runs across the plate. Like the Giants earlier, they capitalized on several free passes and received a clutch single from Khrystopher Nelson, as well as a bases-clearing triple from Harry Giroux. In the sixth inning, Trey Gambitta took the mound and secured the final three outs to seal the victory for the Nationals. Despite the initial setback, the Nationals demonstrated resilience to secure their triumph over the Giants in the playoffs.
